Okay- so Stitcher- is anyone else nervous about their broad usage terms and that unless you have clout they re-process your stream and throw ads on it? I've stayed off of there for all those reasons.

such as audio, etc. Posting links to your podcast for promotion only will be removed immediately by the automod or by a moderator. Repeat offenders will be considered spam and banned with no prior notice.

- For general feedback, you can post your links in the weekly stickied thread stickied at the top of the main page. Please follow the rules listed in the thread.
- Do not make a self post about your podcast doing the same. Please make self posts about your podcast that has actual context and substance, this is a community, not a marketing subreddit.
- If you are a brand new account, you need to spend some time posting on Reddit and interacting with people before posting links here. Your post will be automatically removed and need approval. This is a community, and not just a place to drop your link without interacting with anyone.
- If you are an app developer, marketer, or other non-podcaster who wants feedback from podcast creators or listeners, please message the mods before posting to see if your post would be appropriate here.

You can contact them and opt-out. You can't opt-out of Google Play Music Podcasts doing this to you.

permalink embed parent

[–] lucylu6 2 points 10 months ago

Yeah, I never liked their terms. But you can request that they not rehost your files, that they point directly to your feed. I don't know if you can opt-out of ads, but they say they don't sell ads against your specific show, which I mostly believe since that would piss off the big shows that don't want to compete for advertisers with Stitcher. I've found the ad rotation to be pretty conservative.

Do you know all of these just copy the RSS feed? I've heard of some places making new RSS feeds and messing up downloads/stats.
